INTENT LANGUAGE FOR H.B. 189

On motion of Representative Chard, the House voted to have the following intent language printed upon the pages of the House Journal.

“In passing H.B. 189, Year 2000 Government Immunity, the Legislature intends the following:

The Y2K problem is based on a universally known event: the change from the year 1999 to 2000. The impacts of this event are complex, far-reaching, and virtually impossible to predict. As guardians of the public treasury, the Legislature must take necessary steps to protect the state and local government treasuries from being depleted by a few or by many claims, which would necessitate the need to raise taxes to replenish the treasuries and pay additional claims.

Because government is involved in so many activities and services for the public good, it is particularly exposed to liability claims arising out of the Y2K problem. If the effects were known, the risks would be quantifiable. In spite of Extending sovereign immunity is a reasonable means for eliminating the social and economic evil to the general public resulting from Year 2000 problems because it protects the state and local government treasuries from potential bankruptcy or severe disruption of other government services through loss of available funds and keeps the courts dockets manageable so that important cases are heard in a timely manner.”
